ABSTRACT

Intended for use primarily by the general adult public, this pathfinder lists selected information sources on the Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) that are in the collections of the State University of New York (SUNY) at Buffalo Health Sciences Library, the Central Library-Buffalo, and the Erie County Public Library. A broad range of references dealing with various aspects of AIDS are included, and many of these sources will provide access to information that is suitable for students and researchers as well. Because of the importance of currency of information on this topic and the massive amount of literature available, the sources chosen carry a 1987 or more recent copyright date. The pathfinder begins with a definition of AIDS and a list of relevant subject headings that can be used to locate information on the topic. The bibliography, which makes up the greater part of the pathfinder, is then presented. It is divided into the following sections: (1) Circulating Books; (2) Reference Sources; (3) Journals; (4) Videocassettes; and (5) Pamphlet File Articles. Concluding the bibliography are the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of AIDS organizations not represented in the pamphlet file and local sources of information. Selected for their demonstration of the physical aspects of the disease as well as the social, psychological, and political aspects, the materials listed cover such topics as AIDS treatment and therapy, legal issues (e.g., case studies), statistical data, prevention education, and counseling and support groups. It is noted that sources have been chosen which represent any number of groups affected by the virus, including heterosexuals and homosexuals, women, children, minorities, hemophiliacs, and intravenous drug users. This pathfinder includes sources found at the State Univers[illegible] of New York at Buffalo Health Sciences Library as well as a few importa[illegible] reference sources which the HSL does not own but are available at the Central Library -- Buffalo and Erie County Public Library (these are listed separately with Library of Congress call numbers). Together, these libraries provide an enormous amount of information on AIDS. Since the intended audience is the general adult public, mainstream publications are mostly covered. However, many of the sources included will provide access to information on AIDS which is suitable for students and researchers as well.

Sources chosen have a copyright date of 1987 on for two reasons: there has been such a massive amount of literature published on AIDS since the discovery of the virus in 1981 and currency of information is most important to this topic since much of the literature speaks of current research and new findings. Many of the books included were hot from the press and cover areas of interest such as treatment and therapy, legal issues including case studies (many government documents are identified), statistical data, prevention education, and counseling and support groups.

The abundance of material on this topic and the vast amount of information continually being published made it difficult to develop this pathfinder. This meant being selective over a broad area and browsing through a great deal of information. It was also important to choose literature which would represent a number of particular groups affected by the virus, including heterosexuals as well as homosexuals, women, children and minorities, hemophiliacs, and IV drug users.

All in all, this was quite a challenging topic to pursue. Sources selected will hopefully be valuable to the interested library user who attempts to investigate this topic for any number of reasons.

SCOPE NOTE AND SUBJECT HEADINGS

SCOPE : AIDS (the widely recognized term meaning acquired immune deficiency syndrome) is a fatal disease characterized by a failure of the immune system to protect against opportunistic infections, certain cancers, and neurological disorders. This deficiency is caused by infection with HIV, or the human immunodeficiency virus. A broad range of references dealing with various aspects of AIDS are covered, from 1987 to the present. Materials were selected for their demonstration of the physical aspects of the disease as well as the social, psychological, and political aspects.

An introduction to this topic appears in:

Flanders, Stephen A., and Carl N. Flanders. AIDS. New York : Facts on File, 1991 ; pp.3-56.
WD 308 F584a 1991

SUBJECT HEADINGS : A medical subject heading search on BISON, the automated catalog, and MiniMEDLINE, a database with references to biomedical journals, displayed sixty-three subheadings under acquired immunodeficiency syndrome. The following appropriate headings were chosen to search for materials at the Health Sciences Library, University at Buffalo ; medical subject headings (MeSH) are determined by the National Library of Medicine.

Most relevant subject headings searched:

ACQUIRED IMMUNODEFICIENCY SYNDROME
- -- Diagnosis
- -- Occurrence
- -- Transmission
- -- Etiology
- -- Epidemiology
- -- Prevention control
- -- Complications
- -- Therapy
- -- Psychology
